Hi everyone, and farewell, November!

I would like to start this week with a hearty congratulations to our grade four and five students who hosted a fabulous Entrepreneur's Market this Wednesday in the Anmore gym! Thanks and appreciation are also due to parents, siblings, and friends that lent their time and energy to bring business plans, marketing materials, and products into focus on a deadline, as well as to Ms. Cullum for her guidance and support of this authentic and empowering project, and Michelle Malpass, who introduced the program to our intermediate students a little more than a month ago. Bill Roche and his team from the Power Play Young Entrepreneurs were also helpful guides as the project unfolded, offering inspiration and a structure that created outstanding products and no small amount of social good in and beyond our community.

These sorts of experiential learning opportunities are so meaningful to celebrate alongside the sprawling networks of teachers, peers, friends, and family that make them possible, and can often leave us in the glow of a job well done, glitter from decorations clinging to our hair and clothing on the way home (or for days and weeks afterwards). But just like the 'real life' these lessons are meant to replicate, there can be a lot of hard work, angst, worry, and frustration along the way.

This may have been the case in some of your houses these past few weeks, and I do want to acknowledge that struggle, because it is the tangible experience of a lot of the things we talk about with children (and families) in schools: Resilience, Problem Solving, Creative and Critical Thinking, Kindness and Empathy, Pride. And belief in ourselves.

If we develop confidence and belief in ourselves through overcoming obstacles we didn't know we could, there is always a moment where doubt can speak loudly, and it often takes a community and trust in relationships to persevere until we find success.

As with a few other occasions already this school year, the atmosphere in the gym the other day for the market speaks to the power of community so often evident around the school, and into wider Anmore. Coming together in struggles and celebrations large and small is truly one of the gifts of this neighborhood, and one that will see us through the challenges that inevitably surface in schools and the lives that inhabit them. We conclude our daily announcements each morning by saying that we are here in Anmore to Care for Ourselves, Others, and This Place, and it continues to be a gift to see that ethos in action.

Wishing you a restful weekend, as ever,
