Anderson Ruffin Abbott

Anderson Ruffin Abbott was a Canadian physician, and was deemed the first black physician in the history of Canada. Born to an affluent family in Toronto on April 7, 1837. In his senior secondary year he studied at Toronto academy where he would graduate with honours. Anderson spent his post-secondary education at Oberlin College in Ohio and the University College in Toronto to study chemistry; he completed his education with studies at the Toronto School of Medicine and becoming a licensed physician.

Anderson worked as a civilian surgeon at the Contraban Hospital , a hospital caring for black soldiers in Washington, during the American Civil War. Later, in 1894 he would accept a job as surgeon-in-chief of Provident Hospital in Chicago.
