

WellAhead Summary for BC Pilot Districts 43-Coquitlam

WellAhead

Imagine if we unleashed all schools' full potential to foster the social-emotional wellbeing of children and youth.

Apart from the home, schools are the most influential setting for child and youth development. Adding wellbeing to an already packed schedule can be a challenge, so school communities are looking to find new and creative ways to integrate wellbeing within their existing daily practice.

In the 2015-16 school year, WellAhead – a philanthropic initiative of the J.W. McConnell Family Foundation – will take six BC school districts through a community-led process that will bring multiple stakeholders together to identify ways to integrate wellbeing into school communities.

Everyday Practices

- > The focus this year is on how “everyday practices” can lead to greater integration of wellbeing in schools
- > Everyday practices are sustainable approaches to advancing student wellbeing that don't cost a lot, that fit naturally within the role of schools, and that build upon assets and strengths.

Approach

- > WellAhead draws upon a social innovation lab framework, which includes three core elements:
 - o Co-design: Bringing multiple perspectives – educators, administrators, students, parents and community partners – together to brainstorm solutions
 - o Prototyping: Implementing a set of everyday practices in schools, evaluating their effectiveness, and understanding how change happens in schools
 - o Scaling: Sharing what we learn broadly to influence practice, policy, and public opinion.

Values

- > Collaboration
- > Mass Participation
- > Collective Ownership
- > Transparency
- > Emergence
